+ * + * At the best,
a man's true self is not easy to discover, either for him or for others.

In the chaotic multitude of contradictions, possibly,
doubts, & fears, who shall detect it with certainty? Almost obliterated by the world's slow stain, encrusted
like a sea monster
with the accretions
of daily life & custom, wraps with conforming

The state of habit.
It works by its knees & bodily circumstance,
it seldom sneezes
at view, & is seldom conscious even of its own reality. The old commandment of Know Thyself is impossible of fulfilment, & there is knowledge
not among us who need foretell how he would act in a crisis. In the case of others we foretell
it more confidently,
lessing a less confident

picture of other than of ourselves. Be still, it is not often that we can say "There is the man him self; there is the essential spirit, burning, though only
for a moment, with pure flame, while all the rest, though it
lack for years, is mere twilight, clothed
obscurely, or
unconnected bones
of night."
